Annotation: Every child has the right to live and be brought up in a family, to know his parents, to benefit from their care, to live with them. he has the right to be brought up by his side, to have his interests secured, to be fully developed, and to have his human values respected. The child has the right to visit his father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, brothers, sisters and other relatives. In the absence of the child's parents or when they are deprived of parental rights and in other cases when the child is deprived of parental care, the right to upbringing in the family is ensured by the guardianship and sponsoring body. Protection of the child's rights and legal interests is carried out by his parents (persons replacing them). If a minor is recognized as having full legal capacity in accordance with the law, he has the right to independently exercise his rights and obligations, including the right to protection.

Key words: Child, education, family, couple, parents, child.

Introduction:

Allah has given man a child as a blessing. But sometimes this child can be a disaster for his parents. If the family is peaceful and the parents give good education to their children, and if the child brings grace to his parents when he grows up, then this will be a reward from Allah for them, but if it is the opposite, then may Allah protect him.

The family is the only natural environment for a child to live and grow. That is why, according to Article 2 of the Family Code, parents are charged with the task of taking care of the child's well-being and growth in the family, i.e., the family where the child is born and lives. It is not allowed to interfere with the internal life of the family and the upbringing of the children, and to have a negative influence on the upbringing of the child. Thus, the law fulfills its function aimed at protecting the rights of the family and the child. But if the child's rights are discriminated in the family, it is necessary to exert the necessary influence on such a family by means of the law, to limit the parental right, or even to apply the measure of deprivation in general. The right of minors to live and be educated in the family comes from the parents' obligations to raise them physically and mentally healthy. Personal upbringing of minors by their parents, ensuring their interests, living together with parents in the family, allows them to develop in all aspects, to respect human dignity, to be brought up on the basis of feelings of goodness and kindness. Undermining the rights of minors, abusing them, inflicting physical pain on them and committing other illegal actions that are against their interests are condemned and appropriate by law. causes to be held responsible. In order for minor children to live and be raised in the same family with their parents, he must first know. Children's knowledge of their parents is stipulated in Article 7 of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. The father or mother of a minor child means a man and a woman who are legally married, or persons whose paternity or motherhood has been determined in accordance with the law, and who are recorded as the child's father and mother in the register of civil status documents. Every child has the right to be cared for by his or her parents in the family, which means providing the child with food, medical care, clothing, educational materials and other things necessary for his/her living and education. is caught. In connection with the deprivation of parental rights of parents or for other reasons, it is the responsibility of guardianship and guardianship bodies to ensure the right of minor children who are deprived of their parents' upbringing in the family.

Method and results:

The second part of Article 64 of the Constitution of the Republic of Uzbekistan states that "The state and society shall ensure the feeding, upbringing and education of orphans and children deprived of parental care." Guardianship and guardianship bodies ensure that minor children who are deprived of their parents' education can use their right to education by giving them to foster care and family. Children must also fulfill their duties to their parents. These duties include taking care of parents who have lost their ability to work, who are sick, and who have no breadwinners. Article 66 of the Constitution of the Republic of Uzbekistan on the fulfillment of children's duties is specified in criminal, marriage and family laws. Along with the ruling, the law also specifies ways to pay alimony to a minor child if they demand it. The essence of the rights and obligations of parents and children is that parents are obliged to provide for children who are underage and adult but incapable of work and in need. Parents have the right to conclude an agreement on the maintenance of their minor children. The agreement on the payment of alimony is concluded between the person obliged to pay alimony and the person receiving alimony in written form and approved by a notary. In this case, the procedure and form of payment of alimony is determined by agreement between the parties. However, the amount of alimony should not be less than the amount that children can receive when it is collected in court. Children who grew up unable to work, in turn, forced their parents who were unable to work and needed help.

Discussion:

If adult children refuse to voluntarily provide financial support to their parents, the parents have the right to appeal to the court to collect alimony from the children for their maintenance. Alimony is determined by the court in a fixed monetary amount. The law provides for alimony. Children deprived of parental care are protected by the state separately. The law specifically defines the procedure for placing such children in appropriate institutions for upbringing, including giving them to a family for upbringing (adoption), fostering or giving them to orphanages.

A child

If you want to get fruit from a tree, take care of it from the time of germination.

Uzbek folk proverb

A father gives his child nothing better than good manners. Treat your child with manners, because you are responsible for the manners and upbringing of the child. This responsibility is responsible for the child doing good to you one day.

Hadith

There is nothing big or small in the family. Everything, even the most seemingly simple family relationships, affects the child. In particular, honesty, sincerity, loyalty, sweet talk are one of the necessary vital tools in a child's development.

Abu Ali ibn Sina

You can tell what a father is like by the way he treats his child when no one is around.

— Dan Pearce

Parents telling their child "You are my pride and joy" is the most appropriate behavior in raising a child.

Unarin Romaru

To be a good father or mother, you must always be calm when you need to be angry, and smile when you need to be sad. That's why being a parent is a great skill.

Conclusion: Parents should fulfill their rights in front of their children, children should fulfill their rights and duties in front of their parents, should not torture them, should raise them mentally and physically healthy. They should be interested in what they want, what they want, what they think and pay attention to in order to carry out the tasks assigned to them. It is necessary to help them mentally and spiritually. Unfortunately, some parents refuse to fulfill their obligations, abuse their parental rights, treat their children rudely, and abuse them. In addition, children should not forget their rights and take care of their parents. If adult children, in turn, refuse to provide financial support to their parents who are able to work and need help, they can sue their children. In conclusion, if parents and children do not have to fulfill their rights and obligations, they will be punished according to the law.
